"I know my son (or daughter) needs treatment, but how do I get them to go?"

Sober College Academy has expertise in young adults with drug and alcohol addiction issues. That expertise can help you when you are faced with what to do when your son or daughter is resistant.

Sober College is partnered with interventionists across the country who are especially successful in interventions for young adults.

According to the 2000 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse, an estimated 4.7 million people needed treatment for an illicit drug abuse problem. The numbers swell when you consider gambling, eating disorders and other addictions.

Unfortunately, most people that are in need of treatment will not seek help which translates into millions of people eventually dying without seeking help.

Intervention could be the answer.

A trained professional coordinates friends, family and sometimes, co-workers to facilitate this process. Intervention is a carefully crafted process that directs a non-compliant person towards help and treatment.

The interventionist then works out arrangements for admission to a facility and will accompany them to the treatment center.
